UNDERSTANDING THE JAPANESE, their culture, and their way of doing business has been a lifelong endeavor that has taken me to many interesting places around the world. Over the years I have met numerous Japanese and Americans in the business world and in the classes that I have attended, who added to my knowledge and understanding of the Land of the Rising Sun. Some I met only in passing, but they all graciously told me their personal stories about the Japanese, their culture, and their history, and requested only that I "get it right" in my book. To them I say, domō arigatō gozaimashita, thank you.

In preparing this book, there are several people who were instrumental, not only because they told me their personal stories, but because they shared their observations and knowledge of the Japanese in the business world. Thank you to John R. Fuller, Kathryn Brockman, Steve Shu, and Tony Conrado.

There are also several other people whose belief in me and my project was crucial in seeing it through to its production. Thank you to Hillel Black for acquiring my book and looking into the future to see the need for such a book. Thank you also to Bruce Shostak for his suggestions and constructive critique in helping me to put this book together. I would especially like to thank my agent, Richard Curtis, for his belief in me and in my project.

Finally, I would like to thank Len LaBrae, whose valuable insight, critical observations, and ongoing research helped to make this book a reality.
